Medical Orders for Life-Sustaining Treatment (MOLST): An Effective Tool to Improve Patient Care

Patients' preferences at the end of life are often neither adequately addressed nor honored. The two-tiered DNR protocol in Ohio has been the source of confusion, most DNRs are written two days before a patient's death, referrals to hospice care are frequently made very late in the terminal phase of illness, and advance care planning with the seriously and terminally ill is often incomplete. MOLST is a tool based on a national initiative that clarifies confusion about resuscitation, clarifies patient preferences, and improves advance care planning. This session will provide information about the use of a MOLST form within healthcare systems.
